“The principle for which we contended is bound to reassert itself, though it may be at another time and in another form.”
 President Jefferson Davis, C.S.A.

The Nightingale

One of the last Yankee slave ships, the Nightingale was known as “The Prince of Slavers.” It was built in Maine, bought by a Massachusetts firm and commanded by a New Yorker. A book about the slave trade declared, “The slave trade in New England...provided much of the capital that helped to create the industrial revolution.” Notice the flag proudly flying at the stern. It is the flag of the United States of America. No flag of the Confederate States of America ever flew over a slave ship!

A few words more, touching the conduct of the Federals during this vaunted march of Gen. Sherman from Atlanta to the sea, and I will, my friends, trespass no longer upon your patience.

After alluding to the almost total demolition of the Central Railroad from Gordon to Savannah, and the partial destruction of the Macon and Western, the Augusta and Waynesboro, the Charleston and Savannah, and the Atlantic and Gulf Railways, Gen. Sherman, in his official report, says: "We have also consumed the corn and fodder in the region of country thirty miles on either side of a line from Atlanta to Savannah, as also the sweet potatoes, cattle, hogs, sheep and poultry, and have carried away more than ten thousand horses and mules, as well as a countless number of their slaves. I estimate the damage done to the State of Georgia and its military resources at one hundred millions of dollars; at least twenty millions of which have inured to our advantage, and the remainder is simple waste and destruction."*

"I hope anything I may have said or done will not be construed unfriendly to Mr. Lincoln or Stanton. That negro letter of mine I never designed for publication, but I am honest in my belief that it is not fair to our men to count negroes as equals."
